Well, no need to follow the example sheepishly. The idea is that someone is willing to sign off on your competence as an operator, and doesn't need to be physically present. Some sort of rider attached to the call could be used, like NN1ABC/NT or some such.

Under the current rules, the control operator must be physically present at the control point. Under this sort of system, the "control op" merely signs off that you're competent enough to do the job yourself.

What about us who upgraded and kept our N#XXX calls?
